

Parent's Right to Know

Any school that receives federal funds for Title I, Part A programs must provide parents with information about this law and their child's education.

You have the right to request information regarding the professional qualifications of your child's classroom teacher(s). If you request this information, the district or school will provide you with answers to the following questions:

1. Has your child's teacher met state licensing requirements for the grade level and subject in which the teacher is providing instruction?
2. What are the college degree majors and the fields of discipline for any graduate degrees or certificates the teacher holds?

If teaching under emergency status:

3. Is the teacher working under any emergency status for which the state licensing requirements have been waived?

You also have the right to request information regarding the professional qualifications of the paraprofessional(s) assisting your child's teacher(s). If you request this information, the district or school will provide you answers to the following questions as soon as possible:

1. Is your child receiving Title I, Part A services from a paraprofessional?
If yes,
2. Has he/she completed at least two years of study at an institution of higher education?
3. Has he/she met a rigorous standard of quality by meeting our state's certification procedure for determining quality of paraprofessional staff?
4. Does he/she have the knowledge of, and ability to assist in instructing reading, writing, and math or the knowledge of, and the ability to assist in learning activities such as homework, reading readiness, or other support as appropriate?

In addition, you may request information regarding the level of achievement of your child in each of the state academic assessments, as well as access to the building/district/state report cards.

If at any time your student has been taught for four (4) or more consecutive weeks by a teacher(s) that is not highly qualified, you will be notified by the school of this information.

If you would like to request any of this information, please contact your student's school.
